

Sprint 4 Report - Readra

Revised 5/14/2025

Stop Doing

At this stage in development we decided that sending a notification for a user's rewind should be done at a later date and our attention should primarily be on completing the rewind features themselves as well as cleaning up some features. A significant portion that we unfortunately had to cut was the "Reading Streak" feature which was supposed to be an incentive to keep people reading daily.

Start Doing

At this stage in development we wanted to start shifting more towards putting together the various screens and pieces instead of going to each piece individually and refining those. Unfortunately we did need to cut some parts we wanted to add such as a quote of the day feature but it was really necessary to shift our focus to the bigger picture now. We also had to start compromising in order to fit some of our last minute features like the profile system which would allow us to have custom profile usernames.

Keep Doing

During this sprint we wanted to keep working on the individual rewind screens only and fleshing out some key features of our app like the navigation bar and the book details pages while putting together all of the parts. An example of this being our book card schemas, they were a bit too simplistic and so we continued to refine these UI/UX elements.

Work Update

Finished cleaning up all of the screens for the rewind feature as well as the library/book details page. We also encountered some bugs during our final round of testing (Descriptions wouldn't load for book details screen) so we ironed those out and started wrapping things up.
